This will be a newsletter that confuses and perhaps angers some..but no offense is made deliberately. I am just trying to figure out the world I live in, mixed in with some very basic, and some outlandish social customs and other norms, and not so norms, so many of which are obviously born of biology. I grieve the divorce or separation from a significant other of all three of my children. They (and spouses) didn't stand a chance. I hypothesize the following, in and among other thoughts:

The epiphany came this morning (when running, which is when I get most my epiphanies, unless its sitting when meditating and doing stretches (which leads me to another epiphany: that is – when my body is not engaged, neither is my mind).

So without condemnation, I reason that the biblical family union (accentuated by the catholic church) based on thousands of years of observation forbade birth control....or other horrific things to terminate pregnancies, for the sole purpose of keeping women pregnant. I the good old days this meant becoming pregnant almost every 3 years, since most nursed infants for at least the first few years of life in early culture. The end result was IT KEPT THE FAMILY TOGETHER. The reasons will be clear in a moment.

My mother and I had children exactly 3-4 years apart.... sisters and inlaws spaced children similarly...one commenting before her last pregnancy "that her arms "ached" to hold another baby" .. This obviously a generality, no question, but it does point to a psychology and physiology that work in tandem which I posit may be good for the species, but really hard on women and men alike. Others in the family (not limited to my own children) have gotten into marital difficulties just at the time the last child was 4 years old....wives go awol leaving ostensibly great mates even leaving behind young children to whom they have been wonderful parents.

The culprit, I suggest, is that women go off feeling like no one loved nor needed them once the child gets to be somewhat independent.... the mom then goes into a deep depression feeling unwanted and unloved. I don't think this is a love that a mate can fulfil. I know from my own experience how difficult it is to give up that intense feeling of being needed, which when a kid gets to be 4 or so... begins to wane.

So here - enter - abortion and birth control..... this leaves the way open for limiting the number of children, which biologically shoots us all in the foot. This means that there are millions of women out there who are craving only what biology can give them... and thus the exalating divorce rate and dissatisfaction.... We typically blame men for promiscuity.... But an equal cause is just the empty arm syndrome in women...

Early cultures must have recognized that women go blitz when a child reaches a more independent age (nature did it really) and to keep families together religion prescribed that there could be no hindrance to conception thereby making sure that "mom" was occupied physically and psychologically with a needy infant, and stayed attached via that emotion to the family in general.

What does this have to do with stained glass.... can't think of a single thing.... LOL
