Are you recapping the previous year in your mind? For me, it is not necessary. The human race is very predictable. Speaking in “hopefully humorous terms” I think that "polar (not the ice kind) opinions" are what keep the world tilted on its axis and spinning... ha ha. Humanity is radical, in every aspect of life, radical on issues within the home (how to cook, clean, garden), radical on issues education (what to teach, how to teach it), radical on government (too much too little), radical on whether or not there are “rights” (social security, medicare, red light cameras, censorship) and also on faith (sectarian violence or peace for all).

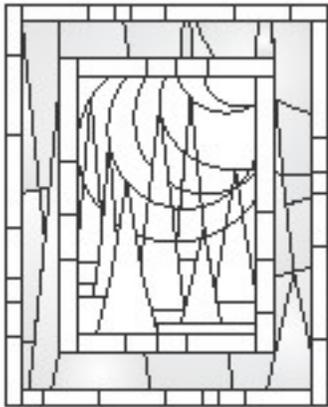

In all humility I would suggest that there is some wisdom and there is also some truth out there jumbled into all of this mess we call civilization: I suggest two simple truths, not new with me for sure, age tried and tested. It is these two marvelous insights that give us joy, peace, and the ultimate happiness (in the new year and every year)

Be receptive to the power of creation, the creator
Take your place beside, not in front of, your neighbor

*What does this have to do with stained glass – you ask?
From my own experience a small amount of stress can be the impetus for creativity, but too much stress can just paralyze me. Great freedom comes from meditation, but also from the recognition that we cannot expect others to change to suit our own agendas, and that these two truths are in balance to free up the mind for invention and discovery and innovation.*
