Times can be tough

It has been a month, rather a year, of disasters. I think all years may be disasters. The hurricanes and loss of life and property, loss of revenue, loss of trust in one's ability to survive in hard times – the fires near Santa Barbara california (where my sister has been evacuating her horses, from place to place trying to keep them safe, and worrying about whether she will have a home after all is said and done).

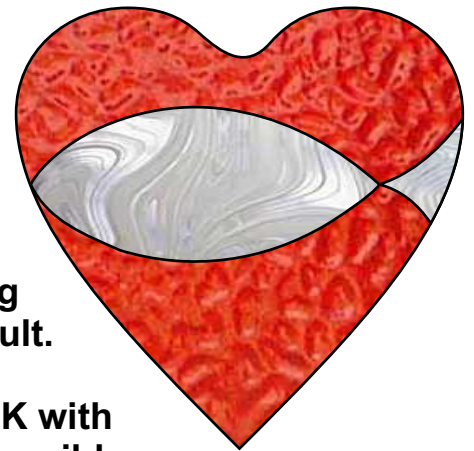

People going through health trials, or the trials of spending their first christmas without a loved one. Yes. Life is difficult. It is not a given that one will experience joy in spite of circumstances. It takes practice over the years, of being OK with the little trials, then when the big one comes, it might be possible to survive with grace and joy.
