HAPPY

Blessings, Joy, Peace, and Hope to you all. I divided up my new year's wish among the newsletters (LOL).

It might be my age, but I thought 2012 was a little taxing, ha ha, its possible that trying to maintain a walk in the "light" on the "yang" on the bright side, gets harder each year. It is also quite probable that the mixed media, constant hype about new material gadgets, and the bombardment daily about every issue that faces 6.5 billion people, drains us of our individual quiet time and therefore there is "no respite", literally "no time to reflect on the good things that happen and the nice people we meet.

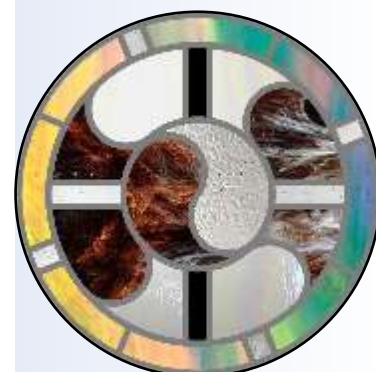

It seems to me that texting on a cell phone, or sending an email, while in and of itself is not necessarily a bad thing, it does lack the opportunity for hugs, and smiles, and subtle body language that add "life" to our communications. The voice (on the phone) is better, but I believe my new years resolution this year will be to make sure that I connect with a smile.... a smile for everyone that I pass, and if possible, also a cheerie "hello" and even more, a cheerie "hello, hope you are well" greeting.

Best wishes for a prosperous, but more than that, a peaceful new year to you, even in the midst of our trials.

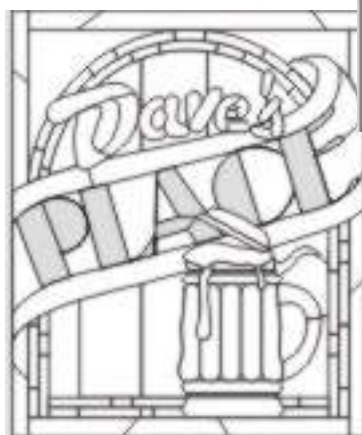

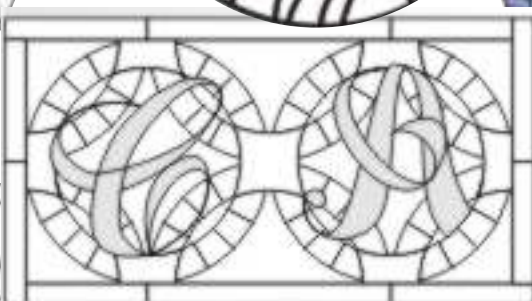

As always, thanks for your business, m
